

THE WORSHIPFUL SOCIETY OF APOTHECARIES OF LONDON

FACULTY OF THE HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

Creative Writing for Medical Ethics 1-day Course

FRIDAY 24TH JANUARY 2020
10AM – 4:00PM

Spend a day enhancing your writing skills on a theme of Medical Ethics at our historic Hall!

Exploring Medical Ethics creatively, through life-writing, fiction, drama and poetry can produce compelling writing and shed light on vexed questions in every-day healthcare.

Led by tutors with many years' experience in teaching creative writing and medical ethics, this one-day course will include structured writing activities, drawing on your own experiences or known cases, followed by detailed feedback on your pieces and guided discussions on the ethical issues they raise. We will identify a range of writing techniques (including structure, dialogue, using status relationships and creating suspense) and deepen our understanding of medical ethics.

Helen Mosby teaches Creative and Reflective Writing at Oxford University Medical School and at the Open University. She has written fiction, performs her own comedy, and is developing a new method of Narrative Professional Reflection for doctors and medical students.

Andrew Papanikitas is director of the course in philosophy of medicine at the Society of Apothecaries and winner of both a BMA writing and BMA book award. He is also a general practitioner and experienced medical teacher.

Held at Apothecaries' Hall, Black Friars Lane, London EC4V 6EJ
