

Dear Colleagues,

A great deal of information is coming out every day about all aspects of COVID-19. We at the Faculty are well aware just how busy you all are and how little time you have for things such as literature searches. To try and help we have produced a listing of some important references, resources & guidance documents.

We must emphasise that this is not a complete or comprehensive listing and it is not intended to compete with the huge resources of medical libraries nor the specific guidance of professional bodies. It is intended to provide a “Go To” resource containing publications and links from a wide range of sources, that may be of practical use to you as you are dealing with the COVID-19 epidemic.

We will update daily if possible and this will work best if you, the users, feed back to us. So if you know of any useful references or resources that are not included, or if you are aware that any of the references or resources listed are out of date or have been superseded, please let us know so that we can put them in, change them or cut them out! When reading material published in printed or on-line journals please bear in mind that the peer review process may have been curtailed.

Best wishes to you all.

The Faculty of Conflict and Catastrophe Medicine
Worshipful Society of Apothecaries of London