

Apothecary Lecturers

There are currently sixteen Apothecaries' Lecturers in the History and Philosophy of Medicine appointed in medical schools, universities and institutions in the UK.

They, with the approval and support of their Deans, teach the history and philosophy of medicine to medical students and others with an interest in the topic, both as part of the normal curriculum and also as extra lectures and courses.

Some run Special Study Modules in medical history, ethics and philosophy success in which counts towards final qualification. These attract considerable attention and large numbers of students.

More lecturers are being recruited, both in the UK, and some overseas. It is very encouraging that the newly founded medical schools are appointing Apothecaries' Lecturers in the History and Philosophy of Medicine. They are all people with a strong commitment to the teaching of the history and philosophy of medicine and a link to the Faculty as a resource to support them in this work.

Brighton and Sussex Medical School
Dr Hilary Morris

Western General Hospital, Edinburgh
Mr Andreas Demetriades

University of London, Institute of Psychiatry
Professor Edgar Jones

Exeter University School of Medicine
Dr Christopher Gardner-Thorpe
Professor Mark Jackson

St George's University of London
Dr Hugh Thomas
Dr Carwyn Hooper

University of Edinburgh College of Medicine and Veterinary Medicine
Dr Iain Macintyre
Dr David Wright

Dean Emeritus, Royal Society of Medicine
Professor David Misselbrook

North Wales
Mr Graham Kyle

Oxford
Dr Andrew Papanikitas

School of Medicine, University of Queensland
Major General John Pearn

University of Otago, New Zealand
Professor Terence Doyle

Aston University
Dr Alexis Paton

Lancaster University Medical School
Mr Bryan Rhodes